The Vision
The Association for Skilled and Technical Sciences is recognized nationally by education, business and government as the premier organization representing technical educators in shaping policy and programs to build a skilled global work force.

Our Core Values
The ASTS mission is built on — and our success depends on — the commitment of our members and partners to the following values: integrity, ethics, respect, responsibility, citizenship and service.

Board Membership
The ASTS Board of Directors consists of representatives from secondary education, post-secondary education, administration, SkillsUSA, teacher educators, business and industry. Officers include a President, President-Elect, Secretary and non-voting Executive Director.

Prepare for Success
Dr. John Gaal has dedicated his career to championing the value of career/technical education and organized labor.

Says Dr. Gaal, “I work to help the public understand that blue collar workers have brains... There is no shame in working with your hands in a skilled trade.”

An Introduction to The Association for Skilled and Technical Sciences

The Association for Skilled and Technical Sciences is the national organization for instructors, administrators, teacher educators, industry partners and supporters of the Skilled and Technical Sciences programs, commonly referred to as Trade and Industry. Traditional beliefs and philosophies are enhanced through efforts of the organization to promote, expand and improve the content of all disciplines found in the Trades field. ASTS encourages additional disciplines to be represented and will further refine the nature of the workplace with the appropriate CTE representation. We want to be your professional organization. ASTS members are typically members of ACTE and SkillsUSA as well as TSA and other established groups.
